FIVE REASONS TO RAISE FOWL This Fall

1

Mild Weather:

Fall typically offers moderate temperatures, making it an ideal time for raising chicks. Unlike the extreme heat of summer or the harsh cold of winter, the mild weather promotes healthier growth and reduces stress on the chicks.

2

Lower Risk of Disease:

Fall is a season with lower insect activity, which can help reduce the risk of certain diseases that may affect young chicks. Additionally, the cooler temperatures can minimize the prevalence of harmful pathogens.

3

Availability of Resources:

In the fall, there is an abundance of natural food sources like insects and plants, which can supplement the chicks' diet and lead to more diverse nutrition.

4

Brooding Conditions:

Fall's cooler weather is conducive to creating optimal brooding conditions. It is easier to control the temperature and humidity in the brooder, providing a comfortable environment for the chicks' early development.

5

Early Maturity:

By raising chicks in the fall, they will mature during the following spring, enabling them to start laying eggs earlier. This allows you to maximize egg production in the coming year.

Keep in mind that the specific benefits of raising chicks in the fall may vary depending on your location and climate. Always consider your local conditions and resources before making a decision.
